

GOLD DRAGON LAIR

BACKGROUND

The mighty Gold Dragon, Ildrand the Bold, has a curious affinity for humans. He is rarely hostile unless heavily provoked and enjoys entertaining and throwing extravagant balls but is rather picky with who he invites.

He has made his home in an abandoned temple, set into the mountainside over a river. The temple was run down and collapsing when he found it, but over time he has rebuilt and restored it to its original grandeur, even maintaining the gardens outside.

Ildrand's lair sits close to the border of two nations who have held a tense peace for many years. Now it seems that peace may be breaking down and war may be on the horizon. Ildrand has been asked to be a neutral arbiter in negotiations, and envoys from both factions are arriving soon for the talks.

Despite agreeing to mediate, Ildrand believes that at least one of the groups is in fact coming with the intent of an ambush and wants a third party of politically unattached adventurers to help him keep watch and ensure nothing untoward happens.
